Frequently Asked Questions

1. What does it cost to be evaluated? $250 for all new patients, $150 for follow up visits
2. Does insurance pay for evaluation? No. Unfortunately, at this time insurance does not cover these evaluations. You may contact your insurer for further information.
3. How many visits are needed? Seeing a physician for medical marijuana is like seeing other physicians or specialists for consultation. The doctor requires follow up visits to make sure the medicine is working optimally and that there are no adverse effects. Most patients require 1-month interval appointments in the early stages of treatment to fine tune the dosing to control symptoms appropriately. Once this is completed, follow-up intervals are between 1 and 3 months based on response to treatment and overall medical condition. A typical patient may see the doctor around 6 times in the first year of treatment and 4 times in the second year of treatment.
4. What is the cost for medical marijuana? The average cost is around $100 - $200 per month for most patients, but some patients pay more. It is not covered by health insurance or prescription drug plans.
5. Does every patient who is seen get medical marijuana? In general, anyone with a qualifying condition and symptoms being treated (or treated in the past) with prescription medications will qualify for treatment. Around 95% of the time this is the case and we developed this 30-second interactive tool for individuals who aren't sure to get a sense about whether they will qualify before coming in for a consultation. However, every patient is evaluated to see if medical marijuana is safe and suitable for them. For example, a patient who would otherwise qualify but is pregnant, allergic to marijuana or who has another known contraindication would not be treated. Conversely, the doctor sometimes identifies that individuals that don't believe they will qualify are actually eligible to be treated.
6. Can I receive medical marijuana for a condition that is not listed such as anxiety? No. In New York State, doctors don't have autonomy to provide medical marijuana for any condition. It must meet specific criteria for approval. However, if you have an approved condition, treatment may also help for a condition that is not on the list.
7. Is Medical Marijuana an effective treatment? Yes. Medical Marijuana works best for certain conditions like Chronic Pain, Multiple Sclerosis & Cancer or any condition associated with pain, muscle spasms or spasticity (stiffness) and many patients find relief for other approved conditions.
8. If I am approved what steps are needed before receiving medical marijuana? How long will it take? Once the doctor certifies you with New York State, you can apply for a card that is mailed. You can then purchase medicine from a dispensary. The entire process from your first evaluation to receiving the medication usually takes between 10 and 20 business days.
9. Where can I find more information? At <http://doctormm.com/faq>
10. How do I get to your office? See below.
11. Where are the local dispensaries located? There are local dispensaries located in Queens, Long Island, Manhattan, and Westchester County. Some dispensaries offer home delivery.
